

Time in the “third kingdom of nature”. Prehistory of palaeontology and palaeoanthropology and its philosophical contexts

Edited by Dezső Gurka

Gondolat Publishers, Budapest, 2021

Contents

The philosophical contexts of the early history of palaeontology and palaeoanthropology

REPRESENTATIONS OF THE TIME OF THE EARTH AND MANKIND IN PHILOSOPHY

Zoltán Horváth: The role of teleology in Kant’s concept of epigenesis

Endre Hárs: Im Auftrag des Menschengeschlechts. Geschichtsphilosophische Ressourcen der Naturgeschichte

Wolfdietrich Schmied-Kowarzik: Schellings Naturphilosophie oder der wirbelnde Strom des Werdens. Zur sich potenzierenden Produktivität des Naturprozesses

Ben Woodard: What would it mean for palaeontology to be transcendental? Schelling and Kielmeyer

Dezső Gurka: Henrik Steffens’s attempt at a Schellingian interpretation of the Earth’s comprehensive history

STAGES IN THE HISTORY OF GERMAN AND HUNGARIAN MINERALOGY AND PALAEONTOLOGY

Miklós Kázmér: In support of the theory of the Flood. A historical reconstruction of Sámuel Köleséri’s lost mineral and fossil collection in early modern Transylvania

Tibor Kecskeméti: From naturalist to palaeontologist. The main factors contributing to the development of palaeontology in Hungary

Hunor Boér – Máté Boér: The kingdom of stones. On a Transylvanian adaptation of the Linnaean mineral taxonomy

Uwe Hossfeld – Jörg Pittelkow – Georgy S. Levit: Paläontologie bei Ernst Haeckel

Gareth Dyke: Resonating through the ages. Notes on the Transylvanian palaeontological legacy of Baron Nopcsa

PALAEONTOLOGY AND PALAEOANTHROPOLOGY IN LITERATURE

Judit Bartha: Palaeontological aspects in Mór Jókai's novels

Piroska Balogh: Palaeoanthropological references in Ágost Greguss's oeuvre